Invitation

Mental disorders now account for the leading global burden of disability. Given the importance of nutrition in supporting both brain structure and function, it seems surprising that diet and nutrition as potentially important factors in mental health have been largely unexamined until recently. However, the recent emergence of high quality clinical, experimental and epidemiological evidence has provided a tipping point for change.

The International Society for Nutritional Psychiatry Research (ISNPR) is uniquely placed at the forefront of a new global movement and paradigm shift in psychiatry. While pharmaceutical development in psychiatry has stalled, the new field of Nutritional Psychiatry is now offering immense promise for the prevention and treatment of mental disorders.

The ISNPR now comprises researchers and clinicians from across the globe, representing many of the leading academic institutions around the world. It incorporates a broad spectrum of research and clinical foci, from psychiatry, psychology, integrative medicine, and all aspects of public and health and clinical practice.

It is our pleasure to invite you to the fourth major international meeting of the International Society for Nutritional Psychiatry Research, to be held in Taipei, Taiwan between the 18th to 19th of October 2025 at the Chang Yung-Fa Foundation International Convention Center. We are excited to announce that this year's conference will be held jointly with the 2025 International Conference of International Society for Precision Health (ISFPH 2025) and the 15th Mind-Body Interface International Symposium (MBI 2025), bringing together a broader network of experts and researchers from various fields.

The conference will comprise:

- Plenary presentations from leading international researchers
- State of the art symposia and oral presentations from researchers and clinicians Multidisciplinary workshops for psychiatrists, psychologists, dietitians and other health professionals
- An exciting social program

This year's theme is "Precision Nutrition for Mental Wellness: Integrating Mind-Body Connections". Addressing the growing global burden of mental health challenges requires a deep understanding of how nutrition influences well-being. This joint conference will explore the mechanisms and pathways linking nutrition, mental health, and the mind-body connection, paving the way for personalized mental healthcare solutions. By uniting experts from diverse disciplines, we aim to advance precision nutrition and improve mental wellness worldwide.

We look forward to welcoming you to Taipei for what promises to be a highly stimulating program that also offers important opportunities for networking, professional training and collaboration.
